

DUQUESNE-PENNWEST

CONFERENCE ON GLOBAL BIOETHICS

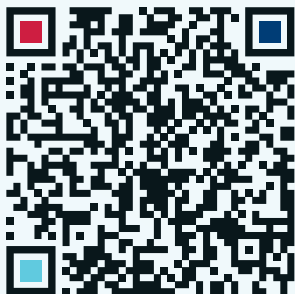

The James F. Drane Bioethics Institute at PennWest University, in collaboration with Duquesne University's Center for Global Health Ethics, is proud to host the second biennial Duquesne-PennWest Conference on Global Bioethics at PennWest University's Edinboro campus. The conference provides an international forum for scholars, clinicians, policymakers, activists, institutional leaders, and students to exchange ideas, present research, build networks, and engage in meaningful dialogue about the ethical dimensions of global health and medicine.

CALL FOR ABSTRACTS

The theme of this year's conference is "The Problem of Health Misinformation and the Role of Bioethics." We welcome abstracts that critically explore the bioethical dimensions of health misinformation and related topics, including but not limited to:

- Health pseudoscience and anti-science movements
- The demarcation problem and the boundaries separating science from pseudoscience
- The role of social media and AI in creating, amplifying, and combating health misinformation
- Biopolitics and its relation to health misinformation and disinformation
- Social, psychological, cultural, and political reasons behind the popularity of pseudoscience
- The "infodemic" and its consequences for global and public health
- The role and responsibilities of bioethics in addressing these challenges

While the central theme focuses on health misinformation, we also welcome abstracts on any topic related to global bioethics.
